

through a friend's eyes

Eirik Tan had been a freelance wedding photographer for four years before he founded Eirik Photography. Believing that only the best things happen at weddings, he considers it a blessing to be able to play such an important role in one. Documenting these moments adds a certain degree of satisfaction to his work, and this is what spurs Eirik on.

He approaches weddings as an observer working in the background discreetly, and not intruding on a special moment to ask for a specific pose. In this way, the essence of each moment is captured as naturally and candidly as possible, expressing the true joyful spirit of a wedding. In order for that to work, Eirik creates rapport quickly with his clients by doing away with the barrier that usually comes between two strangers.

Meeting them for coffees and having conversations other than that about the pending wedding builds a relationship that will only benefit both parties in the end. "I want my clients to know that they have a friend covering their wedding", says Eirik frankly. "I don't want them to look at themselves five years on and ask 'Was that really me?'" He is also able to provide couples with expert advice and suggestions about their wedding preparations should they meet any dead ends. The same theory holds true for the other types of photography that Eirik does, such as pre-natal and child photography.

For more information about Eirik Photography's pre-wedding, actual day, and overseas photography services, do give the friendly man a call. Also, Eirik is planning for pre-wedding shoots at Hawaii and San Francisco next year. If you're planning a wedding there, grab him before he goes! BB
